Lawson Mechanics Receive Certifications

"Dick" Bland, right above, Vice President and General Manager at Lawson Ford, Inc., and James Paulette, left above, Service Manager, are shown congratulating John Latham and Carlton J. Paulette who have just received certification from National Institutue for Automotive Service Excellence. There are eight categories that mechanics are given examinations on and Latham has satisfactorily completed all eight as follows: engine repair, automatic transmission, front end, brakes, manual transmission and rear axle, electrical system, heating and air conditioning, and engine tune-up. Paulette has successfully completed the six categories that he has taken. They include engine repair, automatic transmission, front end, brakes, manual transmission and rear axle, and engine tune-up and he plans to complete the remaining two in the near future. Every three years the NIASE mechanics must be re-certified. According to Mr. Bland, others in the service department will be getting certified from time to time. Lawson Ford is pleased that these men participate in programs that will enable them to give better service to customers.

By the year 2000, there will be 2.4 billion more people on earth than there are today. Today, there are 200,000 more people than there were yesterday. The big question - how will we be able to feed them all then if we can't feed them all now?

From 1940 to 1971, American agricultural output increased by about 83 percent.

If social scientists could be even half as successful in solving the problem of population control as the American Farmer has been solving food production problems, the situation would improve dramatically.
